PROGRESSIV LESSONS IN VOLAPÜK.

*With especial reference to commercial correspondence.**

BY CHARLES E. SPRAGUE.

LESSON XIII.—Continued.

115. The number of times is denoted by the ending na. Velna, seven times. Jölna, eight times. Kilna, three times. Telna, twice (two times). Balna, once. Balidna, the first time. Balidno, for the first time.

116. Um and ün, meaning more and most, or er and est, are applicable to adverbs as well as to adjectives. Jöniko, beautifully. Jönikumo, more beautifully. Jöniküno, most beautifully.

117. There are a few peculiar forms of the verb used in special circumstances, which, as they are not very frequent, I will explain now, rather than wait for them to occur in our letters. First, how to Command or request any one to do something. You know how to say that I go, or he goes, or they will have gone ; how to ask, did we go ? or shall you go ? you can put any of these into the negative and deny the fact of going in all possible tenses ; but you don't know how to order any one "go !" or to put the request "please go !" öd and ös are the syllables used for these purposes, and they are added to the form "you go," which they turn into "go you."

Penol, you (one person) write.

Penols, you (more than one) write.

Penolöd ! write ! (addressed to one person).

Penolsöd ! write ! (both of you, or all of you).

Penolös ;      } please write ; I request you to write,
Penolsös ;      }

Father Schleyer even provides a harsh form of the imperativ (as these forms are called), with the ending -öz. But we shall scarcely need this in the suave correspondence we intend to carry on.

118. On is a peculiar word, meaning people in general, or more, or less of the community. In English we sometimes use "one" in this sense, a distinct word of different origin from one, the number 1. "One sees many curious things in traveling ;" one feels the cold to-day ;" "one ought to wear one's overcoat ;" these are examples of the usage, which is going out of fashion in America. It is a sort of polite evasion of the responsibility of naming the subject. Sometimes we use they, or people, as "they say" for "one says ;" in Volapük sagon. On is fastened to the verb just like ob, ol, om, of, os, and their plurals. Spodon volapüko, one corresponds in the world-language, would be a proper sign for an office where letters are written to foreign countries. Pükon volapüko or simply Volapükon, is the inscription on the window of many establishments where the world-language is spoken.

119. Sometimes it happens that the subject and the object of an action are the same. A person washes himself, or sees himself, or flatters himself, or injures himself. This may be expressed in several ways. Perhaps the simplest way is, in the first and second persons, to repeat the pronoun, in the kimifal. Thus "I see myself" would logob obi, I see me ; you see yourselves, logols olis. But in the third person he sees him will hardly do, for he and him may be different persons, John and Peter. So we have a special form ok, and he sees himself translated logom oki. But logoms okis is specially used for they see each other ; the subjects and the objects are the same but differently combined.

120. But instead of repeating the same pronoun this syllable -ok may be added to the verb, making one word of it. Logobok, I see myself. Logolok, you see yourself. Logomok, he sees himself. Logomsok, they see themselves; while, as stated in the last paragraph, logoms okis is they see each other.

121. To denote something which would happen under a certain supposition the syllable -öv (nearly rhyming with love,) is added to the present or past tenses. I would write, or I should write; penoböv, or äpenoböv, if something else were the case. Ipenoböv, if ibinob-la saunik; I should have written if I had been well.

Notice the -la following ibinob and showing that it is the supposition. It is not true that I was well but I suppose (-la) that I had been; then my writing would have followed as a consequence (öv). This is always the form, -la pointing out the supposition, and -öv the consequence. La always has a hyphen before it, just as -li does.

122. There is another form which will occasionally be met especially in Father Schleyer's own writings; many other writers never use it. It has the letter -i- inserted just before the root syllable to denote a habitual or repeated action.

äpenob, I wrote or was writing,

äipenob, I used to write, I wrote.

Penob, I write or am writing.

aipenob, I write, I am in the habit of writing.

The a of the present, usually omitted, is here restored.

123. O studels löfik !

Nu egivob oles fomis valik, kels pailensumoms fa vöds in Volapük. If estudols dutliko, kanols nu kapälön ti valikosi kelos potuvos in peneds, sesumü vöds nulik, kelis mutols stükön in vödasbuk. Valik, all. Valikos, everything.

Lensumön, to assume. Sumön to take.

Dut, industry, diligence. Dutlik, diligent.

Vöd, word. Vödasbuk, dictionary.

Sesum, exception (out-taking) Sesumü, except.

Sukön, to follow. Sükön, to seek, look for.

Plänön, to explain. Sam, example.

Spod, correspondence. Tedik, commercial.

Bos, something. Boso, somewhat. Fikul, difficulty.

LESSON XIV.

124. Translation of the letter in the last lesson.

DEAR STUDENTS:

I have now given you all the forms which are assumed by words in volapük. If you have studied diligently you can now understand almost everything which will be found in letters, except new words, which must be looked for [“sought” is rather old-fashioned in America] in the dictionary. In the following lesson I shall explain to you the formation of words and give specimens of commercial correspondence. Please read this letter carefully. I have made it somewhat difficult. Next month everything will be explained.

125. Notice that this letter is addressed to the students, in the plural; so every time the word you appears it must be plural; ols, oles, olis, not ol, ole, oli.
